“Miriam, I’ve heard people using your songs as prayer.” – Warsan Shire

The season of Easter contains accumulating and fresh grief, state violence and organizing. What do communities need to be safe when they’re grieving? We reexamine resurrection as a landscape of fresh grief and disruption not yet integrated into people’s beings or community narratives, and we view community care differently. We consider the role of aftermath times, where conditions are raw and ripe for clarity and for wounding, and healing is not yet fully available. How are we present to each other in this space, feeling more than we know, and sensing more than we speak consciously. How do we attend to community need with nuance that is detailed and fuller? We ask separately—what has always been happening? What is happening that has gotten worse? What is happening that is new or different?

The fullness of our questions brings renewed curiosity and honesty into our reflections and observations, even as we don’t yet know all of what is here, or all of what is required of us now.

Meaningful faith formation seeks to combine theology, relevance, community practices, resources and support in equal parts. We are committed to supporting congregants, and caregivers, with tools, accountability peer support and practice navigating how to have faithful conversations about racism, racial violence and police violence as we continue to see escalations of state violence, police brutality and racial violence, amidst a pandemic response that perpetuates existing inequities. We commit to nurturing Intergenerational relationships rooted in contextual learning, theology, and a commitment to faith formation across the lifespan. Consider listening to more on Intergenerationality too.

Inquiry practice—how am I engaged in exploration, experimentation, questioning and investigation in my relationship with God?

Prayer Practice—how am I expanding my comfort, engagement, participation and examples of how to pray, and how to listen to God?

Movement Practice—how is my body, and my attunement to the physical needs of the world connected to my relationship with God?

Community Practice—how can I be connected to God, myself, and my neighbors at the same time, especially when not physically together? How is God calling me to engage with the world more deeply, more widely, and with intention?

Flashcards—A Vocabulary of Racial Justice

Making racial justice accessible requires shared vocabulary. Start to build your glossary of frequently used words to understand. Definitions will be added to these key concepts over the next several weeks of Pentecost, and referenced in Saturday School.

Daily Challenges—Habits of Racial Justice

Making racial justice a value requires conscious decision making. Try these daily suggestions to center Black Lives Matter actively.

Black Lives Matter Coloring Book

Consider printing these coloring sheets, and engaging them during worship each Sunday. Try displaying them in your windows.

A Social Justice MadLib

Experiment with naming your values publicly, and bringing justice issues into your everyday conversations and reflection.

What is a Noticing Wall?

As we adjust to associating faith formation with a physical space in this season of social distancing, you’re invited to create a Noticing Wall somewhere where you can access it every day. Above are two examples of what it could look like—a dedicated space where you can write and draw your daily observations, questions, prayers, sources of inspiration, worries, and experiences. You will receive regular prompts to focus your observations, and invitations to post pictures and comments of what you’re noticing.

Prompt 1: What is God saying?

Prompt 2: Where are my relationships growing?

Prompt 3: What am I listening to?

Prompt 4: What is my body holding?
