“I did not say these things to you from the beginning, because I was with you.” – John 16:4b

The season of Easter though noted as a time of resurrection, is also a time of aftermath. The disciples have to adjust to ministry without their living teacher, or their rabbi, and they have to keep discerning how to live their faith in community. Those questions springboard into the season of Pentecost, and to a time where the advocate arrives. The one who brings forth truth, and ways of accessing deep knowledge of God. In a time where everything has changed about church, we are reminded that everything has also changed in our approach to faith formation. How do we follow Jesus today? How are we connected to the needs of the world? Where do we feel the Spirit moving?

Meaningful faith formation seeks to combine theology, relevance, community practices, resources and support in equal parts. We are committed to supporting congregants, and caregivers, with tools, accountability peer support and practice navigating how to have faithful conversations about racism, racial violence and police violence as we continue to see escalations of state violence, police brutality and racial violence, amidst a pandemic response that perpetuates existing inequities. We commit to nurturing Intergenerational relationships rooted in contextual learning, theology, and a commitment to faith formation across the lifespan. Consider listening to more on Intergenerationality too.

Inquiry practice—how am I engaged in exploration, experimentation, questioning and investigation in my relationship with God?

Prayer Practice—how am I expanding my comfort, engagement, participation and examples of how to pray, and how to listen to God?

Movement Practice—how is my body, and my attunement to the physical needs of the world connected to my relationship with God?

Community Practice—how can I be connected to God, myself, and my neighbors at the same time, especially when not physically together? How is God calling me to engage with the world more deeply, more widely, and with intention?

Flashcards—A Vocabulary of Racial Justice

Making racial justice accessible requires shared vocabulary. Start to build your glossary of frequently used words to understand. Definitions will be added to these key concepts over the next several weeks of Pentecost, and referenced in Saturday School.

Daily Challenges—Habits of Racial Justice

Making racial justice a value requires conscious decision making. Try these daily suggestions to center Black Lives Matter actively.

Black Lives Matter Coloring Book

Consider printing these coloring sheets, and engaging them during worship each Sunday. Try displaying them in your windows.

A Social Justice MadLib

Experiment with naming your values publicly, and bringing justice issues into your everyday conversations and reflection.

What is a Noticing Wall?

As we adjust to associating faith formation with a physical space in this season of social distancing, you’re invited to create a Noticing Wall somewhere where you can access it every day. Above are two examples of what it could look like—a dedicated space where you can write and draw your daily observations, questions, prayers, sources of inspiration, worries, and experiences. You will receive regular prompts to focus your observations, and invitations to post pictures and comments of what you’re noticing.

Prompt 1: What is God saying?

Prompt 2: Where are my relationships growing?

Prompt 3: What am I listening to?

Prompt 4: What is my body holding?
